The circle to me, is a beautiful form and I liked the symbolism of it -- that it implies a cycle or series or something coming back around. So in some ways both the circle and the spheres both have that similar sort metaphor going on. It is the metaphor of coming back around, of staying the same and yet changing. I have done several pieces in a circular form. I have one in Atlanta that I actually took pieces of concrete or of granite and I took and I actually had them physically bolted back together recreating a circle like this. So I like this idea because it is inviting as a shape. I want people to come and feel that they can sit on this and study it and think about it. So, partly it is practical but I keep coming back to the circle implies this idea that things are coming back around.
